INTRODUCTION

As a result of Arizona House Bill 2023 (“HB2023”), “[o]ne of the most popular and effective methods of minority voting [in Arizona] is now a crime.” Doc. 52-2 at 29 (Thomas, C.J., dissenting) (“Dissent”). HB2023 made it a felony for Arizonans to engage in “ballot collection,” a longstanding practice in which thousands of voters have relied on friends, neighbors, advocacy and political organizations, and campaigns to collect and deliver their early ballots to ensure they arrive by the 7 p.m. Election Day deadline. The largely unrefuted evidence in this case overwhelmingly demonstrates that minority voters disproportionately relied on ballot collection to vote. The evidence also shows that the elimination of ballot collection will impose substantial disparate burdens on voters in particular communities, such as those who live in rural areas and on tribal reservations and lack home mail delivery. To justify these burdens, Arizona has offered nothing more than a hollow incantation of “voter fraud,” without a shred of supporting evidence. These justifications are pretextual, and under a proper application of Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act (“VRA”) and the Fourteenth Amendment, HB2023 cannot withstand scrutiny.

Nevertheless, a sharply divided panel of this Court affirmed the district court’s determination that HB2023 should not be preliminarily enjoined. In reaching that conclusion, the majority made several errors of law that conflict with prior decisions of this Court—including an en banc decision issued less than two months ago—other courts of appeals, and the Supreme Court. If not remedied, these errors will result in the abridgement or denial of the fundamental right to vote of thousands of Arizona’s voters, and minority voters in particular.

There is still time to protect these voters in the November general election. Ballot collection is most critical in the final days before the election, when it is too late to ensure that a ballot put in the mail will arrive by 7 p.m. on Election Day.¹ For the reasons that follow, the Court should grant en banc review and reverse the district court. For the same reasons, Plaintiffs ask that this Court enter an injunction pending appeal barring Defendants from enforcing HB2023.

¹ The Arizona Secretary of State’s Office (“SOS”) publicized that November 4 is the “[p]resumptive last day to mail a ballot back to the County Recorder.” 2016 General Election Publicity Pamphlet at 5 (http://apps.azsos.gov/election/2016/General/pamphlet_english.pdf (last visited Oct. 31, 2016)). But the Maricopa County Recorder, responsible for elections in Arizona’s most populous county, advised voters that USPS is not processing ballots as fast as it used to and advised voters to mail their ballots by November 1. See Jude Joffe-Block, Cty. Election Officials: Mail Early Ballots No Later Than November 1, (KJZZ, Oct. 26, 2016) (<http://kjzz.org/content/386836/county-election-officials-mail-early-ballots-no-later-nov-1> (last visited Oct. 31, 2016)). Because of these issues, many did not receive their mail-in ballots until well after they expected to. See Brahm Resnick, 12 news helps voter track down her early ballot, 12 News (Oct. 18, 2016) (<http://www.12news.com/news/politics/12-news-helps-voter-track-down-her-early-ballot/337711816>) (last visited Oct. 31, 2016). Others received ballots citing the wrong deadline for submission—November 18, ten days after Election Day. See id. This is all highly likely to exacerbate the burdensome impact of HB2023 on the fundamental right to vote.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

In recent years, Arizona has strongly encouraged voting by early mail-in ballot, and voting by early ballot now far surpasses any other means of voting in Arizona. In the last presidential election, nearly 1.3 million voters in Maricopa County alone requested early ballots, and 81% of all who participated voted by early ballot. ER491. As early voting has blossomed, many Arizonans have come to rely upon others to collect and hand deliver their voted early ballots, to ensure that they safely arrive by 7 p.m. on Election Day. ER194, 198-99, 200, 204-05, 209-10, 215-16, 219-20, 225-26, 231-32, 239-40, 245-46, 257-58, 264, 267-68, 270-72, 279, 281-82, 288-89, 507-08, 547-48, 552-53, 567-572, 589-90, 594, 596-98, 618-20, 627, 928-29; A.R.S. § 16-548. Ballot collection has been particularly crucial to minority voters, many of whom live in urban areas without secure outgoing mailboxes, or in rural areas—including reservations or border towns with Hispanic populations of over 95%—with no home mail delivery. ER209-10, 225-26, 246-47, 264, 268, 271-72, 299-300, 339-40, 508, 547-48, 571-72, 994-98, 2223-24. These same populations disproportionately lack reliable transportation to vote or deliver their ballot in person, and have economic or personal disadvantages that make ballot collection a critical means of voting. ER194, 198-200, 209-211, 214-16, 219-20, 225-26, 231-33, 239-40, 245-46, 257-58, 264, 267-68, 270-72, 279, 281-82, 286, 339-40, 507-08, 546-48, 571-72, 589-90, 594, 596-98, 618-20, 627, 928-30, 999, 1002.

As ballot collection has grown in popularity, legislators who have not traditionally enjoyed broad support in minority communities have repeatedly tried to restrict it. ER194-99, 246, 258, 267-68, 278.² In 2011, the Legislature passed SB1412, making it a misdemeanor to collect more than a certain number of ballots per election. ER194-97. Because of a long history of racial discrimination, Arizona was then a covered jurisdiction under § 5 of the VRA, and SB1412 was submitted to the Department of Justice (“DOJ”) for preclearance.

DOJ’s preclearance file paints a disturbing and revealing portrait of the law. State elections official Amy Bjelland admitted to DOJ that SB1412’s ballot collection restrictions were “targeted at voting ... in predominantly Hispanic areas” near the border and “[m]any in the [SOS]’s office were worried about the Section 5 review[.]” ER2352-53; see also id. (FBI and SOS found no fraud, but Bjelland thinks a problem “may result ‘from the different way that Mexicans do their elections’”). A county official reported that the restriction would impact a border town where “almost everyone is Hispanic” and “where people ... tend to bring up vote by mail ballots in groups.” ER2345. A state legislator reported that the law was a reaction to an “explo[sion]” of “[t]he percentage of Latinos who vote by mail” in 2010, which “caused Republicans to raise accusations of voter fraud,” though the claims were “baseless.” ER2341-42. He expressed serious concern that SB1412 would negatively impact Latino and Native American voters. ER2341-42.

DOJ officials refused to preclear SB1412 unless Arizona provided more detailed information about the impact of its ballot collection provisions on minority voters. ER2339-40. Rather than provide answers, Arizona withdrew SB1412 from preclearance and repealed it the following session. ER198, 2347, 2350.

When the Supreme Court issued its decision in Shelby Cty., Ala. v. Holder, 133 S. Ct. 2612 (2013), effectively suspending application of § 5, Arizona voters were stripped of the protection they had enjoyed since 1975 against discriminatory voting laws. ER340-41. That spring, the Legislature again targeted ballot collection by enacting HB2305, which contained a provision making it a misdemeanor to collect ballots on behalf of a political party and requiring other collectors to complete an affidavit. HB2305 (2013). Shortly after enactment, citizen groups gathered over 140,000 signatures to place HB2305 on the ballot for a straight up-or-down referendum vote. ER971. To avoid referendum, Republican legislators again repealed their own legislation along party lines, admitting publicly that their goal was to break the bill into smaller pieces and reintroduce individual provisions “a la carte.” ER630-31; see also ER198-99, 267, 278. This they did in the 2015 legislative session, although that effort to restrict ballot collection died in committee. ER971.

In 2016, Republican legislator Rep. Ugenti-Rita introduced HB2023, which was even more extreme than its predecessors, making the “knowing[] collect[ion] of voted or unvoted early ballots from another person ... a class 6 felony,” punishable by up to a year in jail and a $150,000 fine. ER699. Representatives of minority communities argued HB2023 would disproportionately burden minority voters. ER278-79, 281. In particular, they discussed the importance of ballot collection in low-income urban communities, where minority voters often lack access to a secure outgoing mailbox. ER247-48. Representatives of tribal communities also pleaded on behalf of voters on reservation land, informing the Legislature that the bill could disenfranchise “over 10,000” voters who often live up to “40 miles away from the nearest post office box.” ER511-13, 247-48; see also ER225-26, 231-33, 244-46, 264, 268, 271-72, 289, 299-300, 504, 506, 589-90, 511-13, 2223-24, 2227-29. In response, many legislators laughed. ER511-13. Supporters of HB2023 dismissed these barriers as “not my problem,” ER510, and repeatedly characterized such voters as lazy, desiring “special treatment,” or not taking “responsibility”: “They certainly take care of themselves in other situations, so I don’t know why we have to spoon-feed and baby them over their vote.” ER532-33, 542-43, 576-77, 1073-74.

HB2023 was purportedly necessary to “prevent fraud,” although not a single proponent could point to even one incident of ballot collection fraud. Arizona’s criminal code has long protected against ballot collection fraud, see A.R.S. §§ 16-1005(a)-(f); see also A.R.S. § 16-545; A.R.S. §§ 16-1018, 16-1017, and even HB2023’s sponsor admitted that “ballot fraud, electoral fraud, is already addressed all over [the elections code],” ER526-28. Further, there are substantial security measures already in place: voters can confirm ballot delivery online, ER215, 225-26; hand-delivered ballots are verified, ER196, 621-22; ballots are subject to rigorous signature-matching, A.R.S. § 16-548, ballot envelopes are tamper-proof, id., and many collectors voluntarily implement additional security measures. ER205-06, 215, 220, 226, 929. When it was pointed out that Arizona already amply penalizes voter fraud: the bill sponsor claimed that HB2023 addressed “an activity that could potentially lead to [fraud],” ER600 (emphasis added); see also ER269-70, 279. Others contended it was enough that it purportedly addressed public “perceptions” of fraud. ER19-20. At the same time, proponents repeatedly rejected amendments to HB2023 that could have addressed their concerns about fraud—and “public perceptions” thereof—but imposed less of a burden on the right to vote, including permitting ballot collection if the collector and voter both signed an affidavit. ER205, 268-71, 279, 268-69, 557-77, 701-02, 701-02.

Less than six weeks after HB2023 was signed into law on March 9, 2016, Plaintiffs filed suit, alleging violations of the VRA and the Constitution. ER28. Plaintiffs quickly sought a preliminary injunction, which the district court denied on September 23. ER1. They filed a notice of appeal within hours, ER2856, and subsequently filed a motion for injunction pending appeal in the district court. ER2857. Two hours after the district court denied that motion, Plaintiffs filed an emergency motion for an injunction pending appeal and for expedited review with this Court. See ER2818-19; Doc. 16. The motions panel denied the request for an injunction but expedited the appeal. Doc. 27, Doc. 28. On October 28, the merits panel affirmed the district court's denial of injunctive relief by a 2-1 vote. Doc. 55-1, 55-2. On October 29, a judge sua sponte called for a vote to rehear the case en banc, and the parties were directed to file optional supplemental briefs by October 31. Doc. 56.

ARGUMENT

HB2023 violates § 2 of the VRA and the Fourteenth Amendment. In affirming the district court's denial of the motion for a preliminary injunction, the majority departed from longstanding principles in VRA and Fourteenth Amendment jurisprudence and applied new frameworks not previously recognized by the Supreme Court or this Court and that run contrary to the decisions of both. If the majority's new approach is to be Ninth Circuit law, those principles should be declared by this Court after full en banc consideration, not by a sharply divided 2-1 panel.

Rehearing en banc is appropriate where (1) the proceeding involves a question of exceptional importance, (2) consideration by the full Court is necessary to secure or maintain uniformity of the Court's decisions, or (3) the opinion of a panel directly conflicts with an existing opinion by another court of appeals or the Supreme Court and "substantially affects a rule of national application in which there is an overriding need for national uniformity." Circuit Rule 35-1; Fed. R. App. P. 35(a)(1)-(2). Here, review is appropriate for all three of these reasons.

This case implicates the fundamental right to vote. "There is no right more basic in our democracy than the right to participate in electing our political leaders." McCutcheon v. FEC, 134 S. Ct. 1434, 1440-41 (2014) (Roberts, C.J., plurality op.); "[o]ther rights, even the most basic, are illusory if the right to vote is undermined." Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 17 (1964); Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 370 (1886). This case indisputably presents questions of exceptional importance. See generally Gonzalez v. Arizona, 649 F.3d 953, 955 (9th Cir. 2011).

Further, the majority's opinion conflicts with decisions of the Supreme Court, this Court, and other appellate courts in several respects. First, and most problematically, the majority ignored the recent, clear direction from the Supreme Court to be vigilant when constitutional rights are at stake, see Whole Woman's Health v. Hellerstedt, 136 S. Ct. 2292, 2310 (2016), as revised (June 27, 2016) and a clear edict from this Court, sitting en banc just two months ago, that rational-basis review is not appropriate to evaluate the validity of election laws under the Fourteenth Amendment. Pub. Integrity All., Inc. v. City of Tucson, No. 15-16142, 2016 WL 4578366 (9th Cir. Sept. 2, 2016) (en banc). Second, the majority departed from precedent in interpreting the VRA; although both the plain language of the statute and scores of cases make clear that VRA claims must be evaluated under the “totality of the circumstances,” the majority affirmed the district court’s atomistic assessment of the evidence, overlooked a voluminous and largely undisputed factual record establishing that HB2023 will disparately burden minority voters, and failed to even consider the factors that both the Supreme Court, the United States Senate, and courts across the country have held indispensable to an understanding of the “totality of the circumstances.”

I. Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on their claim that HB2023 violates the Fourteenth Amendment.

The majority made several serious errors of law, causing it to significantly devalue HB2023’s burdens on voters, give too much deference to the state’s proffered interests without conducting the required means-fit analysis, and conclude incorrectly that HB2023 is likely to be found constitutional. If left uncorrected, these errors will fundamentally alter Ninth Circuit law on challenges to election laws under the Fourteenth Amendment and place it out of sync with the Supreme Court, sister circuits, and its own existing case law.

A. The conclusion that HB2023 only imposed minimal burdens rest on errors of law.

This Court reviews the denial of a preliminary injunction for abuse of discretion, which occurs when a district court “applies an incorrect legal rule or relies upon a factual finding that is illogical, implausible, or without support in inference that may be drawn from the record.” Ariz. Dream Act Coal. v. Brewer, 757 F.3d 1053, 1060 (9th Cir. 2014) (quotation marks and citation omitted). The district court’s legal conclusions are thus reviewed de novo, and its factual findings for clear error. Planned Parenthood Ariz., Inc. v. Humble, 753 F.3d 905, 911 (9th Cir. 2014). Mixed questions of law and fact are reviewed de novo. United States v. Blaine Cty., Montana, 363 F.3d 897, 909 (9th Cir. 2004).

The Supreme Court has developed a balancing test to determine whether facially nondiscriminatory elections laws impose an “undue” burden on voters in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780, 789 (1983); Burdick v. Takushi, 504 U.S. 428, 434 (1992). In applying the “Anderson-Burdick” test, courts “weigh ‘the character and magnitude of the asserted injury to the rights ... that the plaintiff seeks to vindicate’ against ‘the precise interests put forward by the State as justifications for the burden imposed by its rule,’ taking into consideration ‘the extent to which those interests make it necessary to burden the plaintiff's rights.” Burdick, 504 U.S. at 434 (quoting Anderson, 460 U.S. at 789). This is a “flexible” sliding scale, in which “the rigorousness of [the court’s] inquiry into the propriety of a state election law depends upon the extent to which [the challenged law] burdens [voting rights].” Id. The standard must be calibrated in each case to “[t]he precise character of the state’s action and the nature of the burden on voters.” Ne. Ohio Coal. for the Homeless v. Husted, 696 F.3d 580, 592-93 (6th Cir. 2012) (quotation marks omitted). Anderson-Burdick does not permit rational basis review or burden shifting. Pub. Integrity All., 2016 WL 4578366, at *4 (en banc).

Despite these well-established principles, the majority affirmed the district court’s application of rational basis review. It concluded that the district court did not err, first, in concluding that HB2023 did not “significantly increase the usual burdens of voting,” Op. at 43, and, second, in determining that “laws that do not significantly increase the usual burdens of voting do not raise substantial constitutional concerns.” Id. at 48. But these conclusions are untethered to both binding precedent and to the undisputed facts.

First, the majority rests its conclusion that HB2023 does not “significantly increase the usual burdens of voting” on an inapposite analogy to the facts present in Crawford v. Marion Cty. Election Bd., 553 U.S. 181 (2008) (controlling op.). The majority concluded that HB2023, in its view, imposed a less severe burden than the identification requirement at issue in Crawford. Op. at 45. But it failed to account for crucial differences between Arizona’s election system and Indiana’s. The majority stated that at most, the elimination of HB2023 would force a voter to make a single trip to a polling place, whereas in Crawford a voter would have had to make two trips. But a “simple” trip to a polling place in Arizona may require waiting in line for six hours, see ER264-66, 287, 296-97, and dropping off a ballot can constitute an 80-mile round trip. ER511-13. Further, it is undisputed that Arizonans are heavily reliant on early voting. Dissent at 8-9 (“[W]hen 80% of the electorate uses early absentee voting as the method by which they cast their ballots, the method has transcended convenience and has become instead a practical necessity.”). And the record here, unlike in Crawford, is brimming with evidence about the burdens imposed by HB2023.³ See, e.g., ER203-06, 210-11, 216, 219, 225-27, 231-33, 240, 246-49, 259, 267, 271-72, 281-82, 289, 294, 928-30. Crawford itself makes clear that courts must not “apply[] any ‘litmus test’ that would neatly separate valid from invalid restrictions” and instead must “make the ‘hard judgment’ that our adversary system demands.” 553 U.S. at 190. Had the majority and the district court made that hard judgment, they could only have found that the largely unrefuted evidence consistently points toward significant burdens—as the dissent did. Dissent at 3-11.

Second, the majority amplified the effects of this error by refusing to consider the burdens on those most impacted by HB2023. Both the Supreme Court and this Court have made clear that the burdens imposed by a voting practice challenged under Anderson-Burdick are properly evaluated from the vantage point of the voters for whom the practice is likely to pose the most serious challenges. See Crawford, 553 U.S. at 181, 186, 191, 198, 201; Pub. Integrity All., Inc. v. City of Tucson, -- F. 3d --, 2016 WL 4578366, at *3 n.2 (9th Cir. Sept. 2, 2016) (en banc); One Wis. Inst. v. Thomsen, 2016 WL 4059222, at *35 (W.D. Wis. July 28, 2016); ER2620-22, 2631-33. Here, the undisputed evidence demonstrates that HB2023 imposes particularly severe burdens on rural voters who lack home mail delivery and urban voters who lack access to secure outgoing mailboxes. Appellants’ Opening Br. (“Br”) at 26-27 (Doc. 34); Dissent at 5-8. The majority declined to weigh the burdens by concluding that, because the precise number of impacted voters is not in the record, the evidence was “insufficient for such an analysis.” Op. at 45 (citing Crawford, 553 U.S. at 199–203) (additional citations omitted). But the majority’s focus on numerical precision misunderstands

Crawford's point. Crawford made clear that the important inquiry is not how many are impacted but the nature of the burdens on voters—i.e., how burdensome the laws really were on impacted populations. 533 U.S. at 199.

Here, there is ample evidence detailing the severity of the burden. The dissent describes in detail the burdens on Native American voters who live on tribal lands. Dissent at 6 (uncontested evidence established Tohono O’odham Nation—which rests on land approximately the size of Connecticut—has no home mail delivery and only one post office); id. (undisputed that Cocopah Indian Tribe Reservation does “not have home mail delivery or easy access to a post office”). The undisputed evidence also showed that HB2023’s burdens fell with particular severity on heavily minority rural communities near the Mexican-Arizonan border. Id. at 5 (“The record demonstrated that, in many rural areas with a high proportion of minority voters, home mail delivery was not available, and it was extremely difficult to travel to a post office”); id. (uncontested that “the rural communities of Somerton and San Luis, which are comprised of 95.9% and 98.7% Hispanic voters, respectively, were without home mail delivery and reliable transportation”). The record also contained ample evidence that HB2023 burdens minority voters in low-income urban neighborhoods who lack access to a secure outgoing mailbox and whose socioeconomic disadvantages—the result of hundreds of years of discrimination—make it more difficult to employ alternate means of voting, which is in practice “illusory.” Dissent at 7-9, 28; see also Br. at 26, Further, both the district court and the majority ignored direct evidence of voters who were only able to vote in prior elections because of ballot collection. See ER204-06, 210-11, 226, 232-33, 239, 929-30, 2236-37.

These errors caused the district court and the majority to understate the burden and to erroneously conclude that the criminalization of ballot collection would pose a mere “inconvenience,” despite clear evidence to the contrary. See Dissent at 8-9. The majority’s conclusions should be reexamined en banc and reversed.

B. The majority panel erroneously approved of rational basis review to evaluate State’s interests.

The majority went similarly astray in its assessment of the State’s interests and discussion of the required means-fit analysis. Having incorrectly concluded that HB2023 did not significantly increase burdens of voting, they next affirmed the district court’s contention that “laws that do not significantly increase the usual burdens of voting do not raise substantial constitutional concerns.” Op. at 48 (citing Crawford, 553 U.S. at 198). But Crawford itself explained that, “[h]owever slight th[e] burden [on voting] may appear, ... it must be justified by relevant and legitimate state interests sufficiently weighty to justify the limitation.” 553 U.S. at 191 (internal quotation marks omitted). And as this Court reiterated just two months ago in an en banc decision, “Burdick calls for neither rational basis review nor burden shifting.” Pub. Integrity All., 2016 WL 4578366, at *4, but rather a “balancing and means-end fit analysis.” Id.; accord Burdick, 504 U.S. at 434; Common Cause Ind. v. Individual Members of the Ind. Election Comm’n, 800 F.3d 913, 928 (7th Cir. 2015).

Instead of engaging in “a precise means-end fit analysis,” the majority and the district court uncritically credited the State’s naked assertion that HB2023’s burdens were outweighed by its interest in “preventing absentee-voting fraud and maintaining public confidence in elections.” Op. at 47. In doing so, they absolved the State of its burden to show that its interests justify the specific voting burdens at issue, rather than merely assert that it is so. Op. at 49 (emphasis added); See, e.g., Obama for Am. v. Husted, 697 F.3d 423, 434 (6th Cir. 2012) (“OFA”) (restriction likely unconstitutional where “no evidence” to support “vague” state justifications); Frank v. Walker, 773 F.3d 783, 795 (7th Cir. 2014) (state’s assertion of voter fraud without evidence “conjures up a fact-free cocoon in which to lodge the judiciary”) (Posner, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc); id. (“If the Wisconsin legislature says witches are a problem, shall Wisconsin courts be permitted to conduct witch trials?”); accord Burdick, 504 U.S. at 434 (balancing must “tak[e] into consideration” extent to which “interests make it necessary to burden the plaintiff’s rights”) (citation and quotation marks omitted).

By the majority’s logic, a state can sidestep Burdick’s means-end fit analysis by reciting the “magic words”: a general interest in fraud prevention. But as the Fourth Circuit recently reiterated in NAACP, “[t]his does not mean ... that the State can, by merely asserting an interest in preventing voter fraud, establish that that interest outweighs a significant burden on voters.” 768 F.3d at 547. Instead, “the state must articulate specific, rather than abstract state interests, and explain why the particular restriction imposed is actually necessary, meaning it actually addresses, the interest put forth.” Id. at 545; see also OFA, 697 F.3d at 434. This the majority did not do. They additionally permitted the district court to credit the State’s unsupported proclamation that HB2023 would “instill public confidence.” Op. at 49 (citing Frank v. Walker, 768 F.3d 744, 754–55 (7th Cir. 2014)),⁴ even though that contention is contradicted in this record: that 140,000 voters in Arizona signed a petition for a citizen-led repeal of a precursor bill strongly suggests that HB2023 undermines, rather than bolsters, public confidence in Arizona’s election system. ER971. In simply assuming a means-end fit without conducting the searching inquiry required, the majority controverts binding precedent from Supreme Court and within this Circuit. Anderson, 460 U.S. at 789; Burdick, 504 U.S. at 434; Crawford, 553 U.S. at 186, 191, 198, 201; Pub. Integrity All., 2016 WL 4578355, at *3 n.2; see also Dissent at 3-4 n. 2, Br. 28-29. Had the majority conducted the appropriate analysis, it would have concluded that the burdens imposed by HB2023 are not justified by any concomitant state interest.

II. Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on their Section 2 claim.

A. The majority and the district court failed to consider the totality of the circumstances.

Section 2 of the VRA provides in relevant part: “No voting ... standard, practice, or procedure shall be imposed or applied ... in a manner which results in a denial or abridgement of the right of any citizen of the United States to vote on account of race or color.” 52 U.S.C. § 10301(a). A violation “is established if, based on the totality of the circumstances, it is shown that the political processes ... are not equally open to participation by members of a [protected] class ... in that its members have less opportunity than other members of the electorate to participate in the political process and to elect representatives of their choice.” Id. § 10301(b).

Courts have repeatedly found that the text of § 2 requires that, “[i]n assessing both elements, courts should consider ‘the totality of the circumstances.’” League of Women Voters of N. Carolina v. N. Carolina, 769 F.3d 224, 240 (4th Cir. 2014) (“LOWV”) (quoting 52 U.S.C. § 10301(b)); see also Veasey v. Abbot, 830 F.3d 216, 248 (5th Cir. 2016 (en banc)); Cuthair v. Montezuma-Cortez, Colo. Sch. Dist. No. RE-1, 7 F. Supp. 2d 1152, 1169 (D. Colo. 1998). Both the majority and the district court refused to consider the totality of the circumstances and in doing so committed the same error recently reversed by the Fourth Circuit: they “missed the forest in carefully surveying the many trees, carefully examining individual elements of evidence but refusing to survey the voting landscape as a whole.” McCrorry, 831 F.3d at 214.

Had the majority and the district court considered the totality of the circumstances, they would have found that Plaintiffs amply met their burden of demonstrating that HB2023 will have a disparate impact on minority voters. Plaintiffs offered four different types of evidence that all paint a consistent picture of significant and disparate burdens on minority voters.

First, Plaintiffs submitted “voluminous and undisputed” affidavits from partisan and non-partisan organizers, community advocates, legislators, volunteers, and individual voters across Arizona “showing the burden that the restriction on ballot collection would impose on minorities.” Dissent at 21; ER1002, 2293, 2303, 2311, 245-49, 254, 257-58, 270-72, 281, 286, 299-301. Second, Plaintiffs presented legislative history demonstrating that legislators were aware that ballot collection was used disproportionately in minority communities and that HB2023 was passed in spite of this knowledge. ER247; see also ER225-26, 231-33, 244-46, 264, 268, 271-72, 289, 300, 506, 511-13, 2227-29, 2223-24. This evidence was also not disputed. Third, Plaintiffs submitted the preclearance file kept by DOJ on HB2023's precursor bill, SB1412. That file documents serious concern by legislators, elections officials, and DOJ itself that SB1412—a bill far less restrictive than HB2023—would disparately impact Arizona's minority voters. ER2339-53. That evidence is also undisputed; indeed, much of the file consisted of admissions by the SOS's own employees. ER2439.

Finally, Plaintiffs submitted extensive expert testimony, who concluded that minority voters in Arizona presently suffer disproportionately from a variety of socioeconomic and personal disadvantages—for reasons related to Arizona's long history of racial discrimination—that make them more vulnerable to HB2023's effects. The evidence demonstrated that Arizona's minority voters are thus statistically far less likely to have access to a vehicle, which complicates efforts to vote in-person or drop off ballots at a distant mailbox. ER1002, 2293, 2303, 2311; see also ER245-49, 254, 257-58, 270-72, 281, 286, 299-301. Minority voters lag behind their white peers in education levels, literacy, and English proficiency, all of which create obstacles to successfully navigating the voting process without personal assistance from volunteers and ballot collectors. ER999, 1001, 2293, 2302; see also ER231-32, 238-40, 928-31.⁵ Voters in these communities are also more likely to change addresses more frequently, making it more difficult to locate the correct polling place, leading to a much higher rate of rejected ballots for inadvertently voting in the wrong precinct. ER999, 1002, 1012, 2311, 2724-32, 2293; see also ER928-31. Minority voters are far more likely than their white peers to have to wait in long lines when they attempt to vote in person. ER994-95, 999, 2292. These disparities are highly relevant to the question of whether HB2023 has a disparate impact, and are necessarily part of the “practical evaluation” of the “past and present reality” that must be considered. Gonzalez, 677 F.3d at 406; see also NAACP v. McCrory, No. 16-1498, -- F.3d --, 2016 WL 4053033, at *17 (4th Cir. July 29, 2016) (“These socioeconomic disparities establish that no mere ‘preference’ led African Americans ... to disproportionately lack acceptable photo ID.”); Veasey, 2016 WL 3923868, at *20; LOWV, 769 F.3d at 245 (“In assessing both [the disparate impact and causal] elements, courts should consider the ‘totality of the circumstances’”) (quoting Ohio State Conference of the N.A.A.C.P. v.

Husted, 768 F.3d 524, 554 (6th Cir. 2014), vacated on other grounds, No. 14-3877, 2014 WL 10384647 (6th Cir. Oct. 1, 2014)).

The evidence discussed above all point in one consistent direction: HB2023's burdens will fall disparately upon minority voters in Arizona. Because Plaintiffs submitted substantial evidence, and Defendants did not rejoin with contrary evidence, Plaintiffs have amply met their burden under the preponderance of the evidence standard. Bartlett v. Strickland, 556 U.S. 1, 19-20 (2009); see Dissent at 13-20, Br. at 16-21. The district court's inquiry should have ended there. If the majority's opinion is left to stand, it will require voting rights plaintiffs to meet an additional heightened evidentiary burden, not authorized by the VRA or other legal precedent, requiring them to produce not only evidence of disparate impact but also additional evidence that the burden did not also similarly fall on white voters.⁶ Dissent at 21. The majority's affirmance of the district court's imposition of a heightened standard effectively required Plaintiffs not just to prove their own case, but also to show that there was no other evidence available that disproved it. This argument fails to recognize that the State had the burden of rejoinder, not Plaintiffs. Dissent at 21-22, Br. 16-17, 18 n.8. It is also irreconcilable with the Supreme Court’s warning that courts must reject restrictive readings of the VRA so as to “provid[e] the broadest possible scope,” to effectuate “the broad remedial purpose of rid[ding] the country of racial discrimination in voting” for which it was enacted. Chisom v. Roemer, 501 U.S. 380, 403 (1991) (citations and quotation marks omitted). See Dissent at 15, Br. at 24.

There is no evidence in the record that points to significant or disparate burdens on white voters. The only suggestion that there might be such evidence came unprompted from the district court, which speculated that because some rural communities in Arizona are predominately white, those voters may face the same difficulties as their minority counterparts. ER11.⁷ But the evidence does not support that contention, and in fact reveals the opposite: that there is “plain and uncontroverted” evidence that HB2023 places a disparate burden on minority voters. Dissent at 19. The majority and the district court’s steadfast refusal to acknowledge that all of the evidence consistently points to a finding of disparate burden is contrary to the weight of the evidence and constitutes legal error.

B. The majority erred in failing to reach second step of VRA analysis.

Because the majority affirmed the district court's conclusion that Plaintiffs failed to present sufficient evidence of a disparate burden, neither applied the second part of the VRA test, which considers whether any disparate burden resulting from the challenged law is "in part ... caused by or linked to social and historical conditions that have or currently produce discrimination against members of the protected class." LOWV, 769 F.3d at 240 (quotation marks and citation omitted); see also Gingles, 478 U.S. at 35-36, 47. In conducting this analysis, courts typically look to nine "Senate Factors." There is no requirement that each of these "typical factors" (which are "neither comprehensive or exclusive") "be proved or that a majority of them point one way or the other." Blaine Cty., 363 F.3d at 903 (quoting Gingles, 478 U.S. at 45). However, in failing to consider Plaintiffs' extensive evidence that eight of the nine Senate factors are present here, the majority and the district court discarded the prism that the Supreme Court, the United States Senate, and countless other courts have held necessary to evaluate the totality of the circumstances and which further demonstrate Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on their VRA claim.

Had they properly considered the Senate factors, the majority would have concluded that Arizona has a long history of racial discrimination that permeates every area of social, political, and economic life. Br. at 21-22; Gonzalez, 677 F.3d at 406-07. As the Gingles court recognized, these circumstances are part and parcel of understanding the backdrop against which minority voters in Arizona live and vote today, and are crucial to assessing whether there is a § 2 violation. The effects of Arizona's systemic racial discrimination in areas such as education, employment and public life persist, profoundly impacting social, economic, and political life for minority citizens as reflected in disparate poverty rates, depressed wages, higher levels of unemployment, lower educational attainment, less access to transportation, residential transiency, and poorer health . ER231, 233-34, 264, 272, 286, 319-42, 364-69, 984-90, 999, 1006-07. These disparities contribute to unfamiliarity with the voting process and increase the "cost of voting." See e.g., ER215, 219-20, 225, 231-32, 928-29. Veasey, 830 F.3d at 263. Had they properly surveyed these factors in considering the totality of the circumstances, the majority and the district court would have concluded that ballot collection alleviated many of these burdens, making it easier for these voters to exercise their right to vote. See, e.g., ER204-05, 209-10, 215-16, 225-26, 231-33, 239-40, 257-58, 267-68, 288-89, 514-22, 552-53, 594, 928-29.

When properly viewed against the totality of the circumstances, it also becomes clear that the district court and majority's touting of other available voting methods ignores that many of these opportunities "are illusory." Dissent at 28, Br. 31-35. Had the majority considered the Senate factors as it was required to do, it would have properly concluded that "[t]he totality of the circumstances of this election, coupled with the historic discrimination in Arizona's electoral politics are sufficient to satisfy the second Section 2 requirement." Dissent at 22-28; see also Br. at 21-24.

III. The majority erred in concluding that the equities and the public interest favor Defendants.

The district court's and majority's conclusion that "the balance of hardships and public interest weigh against" an injunction was largely derivative of their incorrect conclusions on the merits. The majority also erred by upholding the district court's failure to assess whether Plaintiffs raised serious questions on the merits and the balance of the hardships tips in their favor. See All. for the Wild Rockies v. Cottrell, 632 F.3d 1127, 1135 (9th Cir. 2011) ("Because it did not apply the 'serious questions' test, the district court made an error of law in denying the preliminary injunction[.]").

This Court has repeatedly recognized that "[t]he deprivation of constitutional rights unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury." Humble, 753 F.3d at 911 (quoting Melandres v. Arpaio, 695 F.3d 990, 1002 (9th Cir. 2012)). Thus, "[c]ourts routinely deem restrictions on fundamental voting rights irreparable injury,” recognizing that, “once the election occurs, there can be no do-over and no redress.” LOWV, 769 F.3d at 247. Further, the State will suffer no prejudice even now; it has conceded that no decision is needed until “late in the game” because the injunction “would be essentially just saying not to enforce a new law.” ER94-97, 100, 119-20, 122-23. It is undoubtedly true that Arizona has “a deep interest in fair elections.” Op. at 58. But such an interest is not served by a law under which “one of the most popular and effective methods of minority voting is now a crime.” Dissent at 29. HB2023 is a deeply troubling law, which undermines the fairness of elections in Arizona rather than bolsters it.

CONCLUSION

If allowed to stand, the majority’s decision will force the Ninth Circuit out of sync with longstanding precedent from the Supreme Court and this Circuit’s prior decisions on the proper application of the VRA and the Fourteenth Amendment. Every day remaining in this election cycle provides an opportunity for citizens to cast their vote using ballot collection: a familiar, popular and long-standing method of exercising the franchise in Arizona. For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiffs respectfully request the Court order a rehearing of the case en banc and correct the errors of law evident in the district court’s and majority’s respective opinions. In the interest of expediency, Plaintiffs respectfully request that the Court conduct this rehearing on the papers only, without additional oral argument.

RESPECTFULLY SUBMITTED this 31st day of October, 2016.
