

CNET > News > Entertainment
 February 21, 2007 4:00 AM PST

A new copyright battlefield: Veoh Networks

By Greg Sandoval
 Staff Writer, CNET News

Related Stories

- The YouTube factor in online video
February 21, 2007
- Viacom, Joost strike content licensing deal
February 20, 2007
- Top YouTube videographers descend on San Francisco
February 17, 2007
- YouTube rivals look for answers
January 10, 2007
- TVU chief grapples with copyright questions
November 6, 2006
- Video sites grapple with specter of smut
June 19, 2006
- Home movies? Veoh has got 10,000 online
November 9, 2005

One of the last places you might expect to find copyright violations is on a Web site backed by Time Warner and former Disney CEO Michael Eisner.

Nonetheless, Veoh Networks CEO Dmitry Shapiro acknowledges that only a week after the company's official debut, Veoh.com is host to a wide range of unauthorized and full-length copies of popular programs. But Shapiro says it's not his upstart video company's fault: Blame the people who are posting the material.

"We have a policy that specifically states that when we see copyright material posted, we take it down," Shapiro said. "This problem is the democratization of publishing. Anyone can now post a video to the Internet. Sometimes the material belongs to someone else. We take this very seriously."

Veoh has raised about $12 million from investors such as Eisner and Time Warner, and it wants to be more than just another YouTube. Executives have their sights on distributing long-format video for networks and media companies, and Veoh claims its peer-to-peer technology enables content creators to transmit higher-quality video much more efficiently.

The problem, of course, is dealing with the content piracy that nearly every video-sharing and peer-to-peer company has faced. While executives at these companies have argued they discourage copyright violations, there's little question that their customers aren't so easily discouraged. The law requires a company to remove copyright-infringing videos once notified by a copyright holder, but a company doesn't have to screen material or actively police the site.

Veoh's ambitious plan to distribute long-format videos adds another wrinkle to the fight between technology companies and content owners. Even YouTube, which has come under fire from a range of content owners because of copyright issues, tries to prevent people from uploading full-length films and TV shows by limiting clips to 10 minutes. Now content owners have to worry about their entire programs getting posted.

"I can't believe Hollywood is going to let (Veoh) get away with this," said Josh Martin, an analyst at the research firm Yankee Group. "The environment is different now. The media companies know that it's wrong now and I can't imagine that they are going to sit still about entire episodes being posted. You have to remember that YouTube"--which gained early notoriety from postings of copyrighted material--"was at the right place at the right time, and I don't see that happening again."

A review of Veoh found an extensive list of professionally made

"I can't believe

What's Hot

Discussions

Shared

177 comments

iPhone 5S will bring back 'one more thing,' analyst says

168 comments

Dad says Facebook photo of son with gun brought cops to house

106 comments

Supreme Court won't hear Jammie Thomas' file-sharing case

105 comments

Cops: U.S. law should require logs of your text messages

80 comments

BlackBerry's Heins: Apple's iOS is a little long in the tooth

RSS Feeds

Add headlines from CNET News to your homepage or feedreader.

shows, including an hourlong animated feature produced by Disney called Cinderella III: A Twist in Time (the video was removed over the weekend), and a two-hour video of a soccer match between England and Spain. Also on Veoh, users need only turn off a "family filter" to find a wide assortment of adult material.

The appearance of unauthorized videos at Veoh is surprising to some analysts because the San Diego company has strong ties to the entertainment sector. Another thing that has industry insiders scratching their heads is why Veoh would attempt a strategy that looks like YouTube on steroids at a time when YouTube continues to butt heads with media powerhouses over copyright issues.

Two weeks ago, entertainment conglomerate Viacom demanded that YouTube remove 100,000 videos from the site that featured material from its TV shows and films. Viacom announced Tuesday that it has signed a licensing deal with Joost, the start-up backed by the founders of Skype and Kazaa, which promises to prevent infringement of intellectual property. Earlier this month, NBC's new CEO, Jeff Zucker, also blasted YouTube for failing to deliver a promised technology that would help screen the site for copyright content.

YouTube is hardly the only Internet video company running into copyright controversy. Sony's video-sharing offering, Grouper, and Bolt.com have been accused of violating copyrights. TVU Networks, a peer-to-peer start-up that allows users to stream TV shows to the Web, has also run afoul of some large media companies in recent months: some have sent TVU "take-down" notices, including Major League Baseball and HBO, demanding that the company remove their content.

One reason Hollywood and big media companies have yet to react to the copyright infringement at Veoh may be because the site has yet to draw much attention. Having officially launched only a week ago, the site is just now building an audience.

Asked about the full-length episodes at Veoh, Jeremy Zweig, a spokesman at Viacom, said the company has concentrated on fighting the copyright battle at places where the most violations occur--YouTube, MySpace and Google Video.

"We allocate our resources based on where we think the most harm is being done," Zweig said. "We haven't focused on Veoh at this point."

Privately held Veoh is planning to use P2P technology to distribute DVD-quality video and allow it to be posted to other Web sites, including YouTube's. The site currently requires a software download, but company officials say its technology enables content creators to distribute their video much more efficiently than other methods. The company is also offering a syndication service that will distribute video across the Web and can also embed ads.

Shapiro insists that the copyright material found on the site is only temporary.

"We're all inventing a new medium," Shapiro said. "When you start off you have some issues, but all of us in this industry are working to solve those issues."

See more CNET content tagged:

Veoh Networks, Michael Eisner, media company, copyright violation, Viacom Inc.

Hollywood is going to let (Veoh) get away with this. The environment is different now. The media companies know that it's wrong now and I can't imagine that they are going to sit still about entire episodes being posted."

--Josh Martin, analyst, Yankee Group

LJM Recordings, Inc. v. Shelter Capital Partners LLC
 No. 09-55902 archived on March 21, 2013

DON'T MISS

Android 5.0 coming to Samsung Galaxy phones, reports say
CNET

SimCity: The new game you can't play
CNET

Retiring Without A 401(k)? Here's What To Do
investopedia.com

Hands on with the Samsung Series 7 Ultra
Digital Trends

about these links

Veoh was sued in June 2006
Veoh has been sued for copyright already. Specifically, in June 2006 by Titan Media, a publisher of gary adult videos. I think it was the first online video lawsuit.

Posted by sabryant1000 (1 comment)
February 21, 2007 8:44 AM(PST)

Like Reply Link Flag

It's All About the Risk
Anyone who uses an open-forum content model that invites people to post whatever they want is putting themselves at higher risk of copyright infringement. While I absolutely agree that the onus should be on whoever posts the content, it's unfortunately almost never perceived that way. Since the poster is usually relatively unknown, we seek familiarity in the content's presenter, which in this case is the forum site.

So at the end of the day, yeah there might be higher gains to be made, as the open-forum is generally applauded by most Internet users. But we also shouldn't forget that the cost of rogue illegitimate content can be much higher too.

Posted by phantomsoul (50 comments)
February 21, 2007 12:14 PM(PST)

Like Reply Link Flag

Yeah
I agree. If someone were to walk into Disney World right now and kill someone then would it be Disney's fault?? No. Just because an illegal activity has occurred within a company's property (in this case web service) doesn't make it their fault.

Posted by adv89 (68 comments)
February 21, 2007 1:08 PM(PST)

Like Link Flag

UMG Recordings, Inc. v. Shelter Capital Partners LLC
No. 09-55902 archived on March 21, 2013

It is simple just change the copyright laws back to having to actually register your work and reduce the term back down to the original 14 years!!! The major portion of the economic lifespan of a copyrighted work is over just 5 years after publication. Most books are out of print by then and films are littering the bargain basement bins. There is no reason to keep monopoly of a work for lifetime + 70 !!!

Our politician have been paid off by big media and the public and public domain has been screwed!

Posted by dddiest (27 comments)
December 25, 2008 11:29 AM(PST)

Like Reply Link Flag

Join the conversation

Log in or create an account to post a comment, or quickly sign in with:

Comment

Add your comment

The posting of advertisements, profanity, or personal attacks is prohibited. Click here to review our Terms of Use.

Ads

Copyright in 3 Easy Steps

(1) Sign up (2) Fill in online form (3) LegalZoom files your copyright
LegalZoom.com/Copyright

100% Free Cloud Storage

Store All Your Files In The Cloud. Access Files Anywhere - Anytime!
www.JustCloudFree.com

Advance Persistent Threat

Detect For Free. Immediate Results - Try Now!
seculert.com/APT-Detection

*UMG Recordings, Inc. v. Shelter Capital Partners LLC
No. 09-55902 archived on March 21, 2013*

© CBS Interactive Inc. All rights reserved. Privacy Policy | Ad Choice | Terms of Use | Mobile User Agreement | Visit other CBS Interactive sites:

Reviews

- All Reviews
- Camcorders
- Car Tech
- Cell Phones
- Digital Cameras
- GPS
- Laptops
- TVs

News

- All News
- Business Tech
- Crave
- Cutting Edge
- Green Tech
- Security
- Wireless

Downloads

- Add Your Software
- All Downloads
- Mac
- Mobile
- Software Deals
- Webware
- Windows

CNET TV

- All Videos
- Always On
- Apple Byte
- Most Popular
- CNET Top 5
- CNET Update
- Prizefight

More

- About CBS Interactive
- About CNET
- CNET Deals
- CNET Forums
- CNET Mobile
- CNET Site Map
- Corrections
- Help Center
- Permissions

Follow us via...

- Facebook
- Twitter
- Google+
- YouTube
- LinkedIn
- Tumblr
- Pinterest
- Newsletters
- RSS

c|net Like 1.1m Follow @CNET