Ordinances are formal legislative acts of the Council and should be used whenever the Council intends to pass a regulatory measure, especially when it provides a penalty for violation. The procedures for adoption of an ordinance are prescribed by Idaho Code, Sections 50-901, 50-901A, and 50-902 and must be strictly followed. The following are examples of when to use an ordinance:

• to regulate people (e.g. disturbing the peace)

• to regulate property (e.g. zoning)

• to grant franchises

• to authorize bond issues

• to adopt the annual appropriation

• to adopt a records retention schedule

• to modify City Code

Resolutions are binding decisions of the Council and are used for more administrative matters. Unlike the adoption of an ordinance, there are no reading and notice requirements.
