

POLITICS HOME

THE CAUCUS

FIFTYTHIRTY EIGHT

ELECTION 2012

INSIDE CONGRESS

POLL WATCH

VIDEO

WENDY STOOD UP FOR WOMEN'S HEALTH TELL HER YOU'RE IN THIS FIGHT FOR THE LONG RUN CLICK HERE Paid for by Planned Parenthood Action Fund Advertise on NYTimes.com

FiveThirtyEight

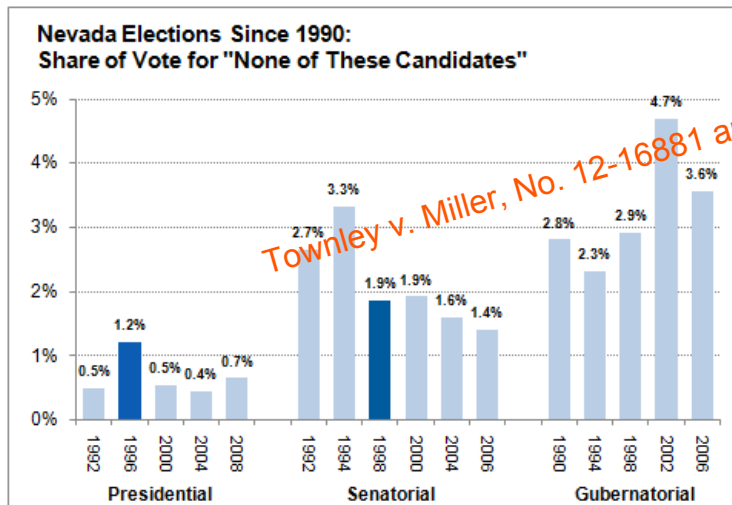

Nate Silver's Political Calculus

August 27, 2010, 4:22 pm | 124 Comments

In Nevada, No One Is Someone to Watch

By NATE SILVER

Updated

Voters in states like Illinois and North Carolina, where both the Republican and Democratic nominees for Senate are unpopular and where the number of undecided voters remains high, might lament the choice before them.

But other voters, especially those who might consider it their patriotic duty to vote, might wish for a more affirmative way to register their displeasure with their choices.

Since 1975, Nevadans have had the choice of voting for "None of These Candidates," which appears as a ballot line along with the named candidates.

Search This Blog

Previous Post A Closer Look at Alaska

Next Post With Increase in Partisanship, Fewer Surprises Likely in Governors' Races

FOLLOW THIS BLOG Twitter RSS

Reads and Reactions

- THEMONKEYCAGE.ORG The Majority Rules, and When It Doesn't, It Rolls
PEWRESEARCH.ORG Age of First-time Motherhood Rising in Canada
PEWSOCIALTRENDS.ORG The Rise of Single Fathers
YELP.COM Yelp Wordmap, NYC

Powered by Blogrunner

Advertise on NYTimes.com

Featured Posts

- As More Attend College, Majors Become More Career-Focused Early Leader in Polls Usually Wins New York

spoiler role: the 1.2 percent of voters who selected None of These Candidates in the 1996 presidential race was larger than the margin separating Bill Clinton and Bob Dole. And in the 1998 Senate race, the 8,125 votes for None of These Candidates easily outdistanced the 395-vote margin between Harry Reid and John Ensign, allowing Mr. Reid to be re-elected.

Mr. Reid may again be hoping to get an assist from the ballot option this year, which is unique among the 50 states. Indeed, there are those who think his entire campaign may be predicated upon it. Mr. Reid's job approval numbers, hovering around 40 percent in most polls, would ordinarily prevent a candidate from being re-elected. But his opponent, Sharron Angle, whom the Reid campaign has tagged for her "extreme and dangerous" views, might not be elected under ordinary circumstances either. A recent poll by Mason-Dixon for The Las Vegas Review-Journal found, remarkably, that 66 percent of Ms. Angle's voters wished that the Republican Party had nominated someone else in her place; the comparable figure for Mr. Reid is just 18 percent. (Ms. Angle received 40 percent of the vote in the Republican primary on June 8.)

"Reid's strategy from Day 1 has been to push as many potential Angle voters into none-of-the-above as possible," I was told by Jon Ralston, the chief political reporter for The Las Vegas Sun. "That is why they're running the campaign they're running."

Mr. Ralston felt that the presence of the none-of-the-above option was unambiguously helpful to Mr. Reid, who has run an attack campaign. "Nothing that happens is going to move his number up," he told me. "The Reid campaign knows that he hits a ceiling at a certain level."

Jerry Stacy, a spokesman for Ms. Angle, largely echoed Mr. Ralston's assessment.

"Any vote not for Sharron Angle is a vote for Harry Reid," said Mr. Stacy, who predicted that the strategy would eventually backfire. "They know that and that's why they're running one of the most negative campaigns in history."

Kelly Steele, a spokesman for Mr. Reid, declined to comment on how the presence of the ballot line might be impacting Mr. Reid's strategy.

The strategy has its limitations. "Sharron Angle could confess to being a serial killer tomorrow, and there are still 40 percent of people who would vote for her over Reid," Mr. Ralston said. Nevertheless, if Mr. Reid were able to secure, say, 46 percent of the vote and another 8 percent were to go to None of These Candidates or to third-party candidates, that would be enough for him to be re-elected.

The strategy has its limitations. "Sharron Angle could confess to being a serial killer tomorrow, and there are still 40 percent of people who would vote for her over Reid," Mr. Ralston said. But if Mr. Reid were able to secure, say, 46 percent of the vote and another 8 percent were to go to None of These Candidates or to third-party alternatives, that would be enough to secure re-election for him.

The Mason-Dixon poll did not show a figure that high. Instead, 4 percent of its respondents said they preferred the None of These option. (The poll gave Mr. Reid a 45-44 lead, well within its margin of error.) Other polls of the race, like those from Rasmussen Reports and Ipsos, have ignored the presence of the none-of-the-above option.

But the Mason-Dixon poll also showed that 5 percent of the electorate was undecided — and those voters could wind up selecting None of These Candidates. Mr. Ralston told me that 4 percent was on the low end of where the None of These option might finish. (Its high-water mark in recent

Mayoral Primary 48

- Why Can't Canada Win the Stanley Cup? 129
- Bachmann's Retirement Reduces Electoral Risk for G.O.P. 44

About the Blog

FiveThirtyEight's mission is to help New York Times readers cut through the clutter of an increasingly data-rich world. The blog, founded by Nate Silver in 2008, is devoted to rigorous, data-driven analysis of politics, polling, public affairs, sports, economics, science and culture. FiveThirtyEight also offers forecasts of upcoming presidential, congressional and gubernatorial elections, using proprietary statistical models. Read more »

Nate Silver is the author of The Signal and the Noise

- Nate Silver's 2012 Results »
- @FiveThirtyEight on Twitter »
- Glossary »
- E-mail Nate Silver »
- FiveThirtyEight Archive »

FiveThirtyEight's 2012 Forecast

The final FiveThirtyEight state-by-state projections for the 2012 presidential race. View »

VIDEO »

More Video »

POLITICS

Beyond 'This Town' With Mark Leibovich

After writing a book that chews through a collection of Washington egos, The Times's Mark Leibovich talks about how life goes on when your best subjects are also your neighbors.

Recent Posts

July 15
157

Senate Control in 2014 Increasingly Looks Like a Tossup

A race-by-race analysis of the Senate suggests that Republicans might now be close to even-money to win control of the chamber after next year's elections.

July 10
111

Public Opinion Shifts on Security-Liberty Balance

A new Quinnipiac poll has found a significant shift in public opinion on the trade-off between civil liberties and national security.

July 09
20

Rubio Is Losing Support Among Republican Voters

In recent polls, taken amid the debate on immigration reform, Marco Rubio's favorability ratings and standing in 2016 Republican primary matchups have fallen.

elections came in 2002, when it received 4.7 percent of the vote in the state's gubernatorial race.) With Ms. Angle projected to defeat Mr. Reid by just 1.3 percent in our latest forecast model, it could easily make the difference in the race.

One thing that None of These Candidates cannot do is actually win the election. Were it to take the plurality, the election would default to the second-place candidate, as it did to Mr. Earhart in 1976. Misconceptions about this contingency surface occasionally in coverage of Nevada elections, and are perhaps more widespread among voters, who might envision a symbolic empty chair in the Senate.

Still, the ballot option is part of what makes Nevada's political culture so unique.

"Why would you bother to vote — and then not vote for a candidate?" Mr. Ralston asked. "There's always been a kind of independent, kind of an anti-everything streak that goes with the federal government's dominant presence here, owning 82 percent of the land, trying to stick us with things like Yucca Mountain. There's a rebellious streak here in that way."

f FACEBOOK t TWITTER + GOOGLE+ e E-MAIL + SHARE p PRINT

2010 midterm elections, Nevada

Related Posts

FROM FIVETHIRTYEIGHT

Advantage Romney in February, but Risks Abound

Nov. 3: Romney's Reason to Play for Pennsylvania

In Nevada, Obama, Ryan and Signs of a New \(Democratic-Leaning\) Normal

Oct. 12: Romney Debate Gains Show Staying Power

Senate Forecast: What Has Gone Wrong for G.O.P. Candidates?

Townley v. Miller No. 12-16881 archived on July 16, 2013

Previous Post

A Closer Look at Alaska

Next Post

With Increase in Partisanship, Fewer Surprises Likely in Governors' Races

124 Comments

Share your thoughts.

ALL

READER PICKS

Newest ▾

Write a Comment

WhyPanic · Reno, NV

Jack Atherton, it's hard to believe that you are actually a native of Reno, as your post is very suggestive of a national view point, and not a local one. To the majority of America, Angle is just a conservative alternative to Reid, but locally she is very different. As a northern Nevadan, you should know how much anger there was towards Angle by local republicans who had to suffer through two unnecessarily contentious republican primaries because of Angles over inflated ego.

More importantly you should also be able to remember her tenure within the state assembly where she was consistently ranked as one of the least effective assembly persons in the state. She hates compromise, and never wielded any power, even within her own party. There is a reason why popular Republicans like Mayor Bob Cashell have endorsed Reid over their own parties nominee. Angle is a bad candidate, she was chosen not on her own merits, but was instead well funded by out of state interest group, who capitalized on Sue Lowdens gaffs, and pushed her

July 02
142

As Texas G.O.P. Revives Abortion Ban, a Look at Public Opinion

Public opinion surveys consistently find a majority of Americans support a right to an abortion, but also show that support narrows further into a pregnancy.

July 01
22

Re-Election Is Likely for McConnell, but Not Guaranteed

Senator Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, the Republican leader, will probably be the favorite against Alison Lundergran Grimes, who entered the race on Monday. But he is unlikely to sail to re-election.

More News

THE CAUCUS NYTIMES.COM POLITICS

Video: Beyond 'This Town'

After writing a book that chews through many Washington egos, The Times's Mark Leibovich talks about how life goes on when your best subjects are also your neighbors.

Illinois Attorney General Will Not Run for Governor

Lisa Madigan, the attorney general of Illinois and the daughter of the longtime speaker of the state House, will not run for governor next year, ending months of speculation that she would.

Anti-Citizenship Protesters Issue Warning to House

About 2,000 opponents of a Senate immigration bill that would create a path to citizenship held a "March for Jobs" in Washington in a bid to draw blacks to the cause.

Today's Headlines Daily E-Mail

Sign up for a roundup of the day's top stories, sent every morning.

See Sample | Privacy Policy

In Performance: Carla Gugino

ALSO IN VIDEO »

- "Choir Boy"
- In Performance: Steven Pasquale

nytimes.com

VIDEO

Follow The New York Times »

f Facebook

t Twitter

You Tube YouTube

RSS

Ads by Google

what's this?

Help Stop Iran

Show Your Support For Israel. Get a Free U.S.-Israel Flag Pin. www.IFCJ.org

3 Early Signs of Dementia

Doctor: Know These 3 Warning Signs You're About to Suffer Dementia www.newsmax.com

Kate Middleton Photos

Stunning Pictures of Princess Kate Middleton and the Royal Family. Kate-Middleton.StyleBistro.com

through to the nominee because the majority of the state lives in southern Nevada where she lacked the negative

READ MORE COMMENTS ▾

Townley v. Miller, No. 12-16881 archived on July 16, 2013