

News Coverage of the 1934 Longshore Strike

The 1934 waterfront strike closed ports up and down the West Coast for 83 days and was arguably the most significant waterfront strike in American history. It began with a coast-wide longshore strike organized and led by the International Longshoremen Association (ILA). Originally, the ILA demanded higher wages and a shorter workday, but expanded its demands to include ILA recognition by the employers and union control of the waterfront hiring halls. As the strike progressed, it encompassed the entire maritime shipping industry on the West Coast, and made front-page news for the entire two and a half months of the port's closure. Here is a complete day-by-day record of the strike -- more than 600 articles that appeared in Seattle newspapers during that period. The database was begun by Rachelle Byarlay and accompanies her essay "The Seattle Press and the 1934 Strike." Click the titles to read the articles. Kaitlyn Sortino organized the database. Jenica Nixon, Mike Becker, Jared Kanda, and Kyle Gorman helped with research.
