being a felon in possession of a firearm, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1). We have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291, and we affirm.

Reynolds contends that the category VI criminal history substantially over-represented his criminal history and that the district court therefore abused its discretion by failing to depart under U.S.S.G. § 4A1.3(b)(1) or vary downwards. When a district court makes a decision regarding whether to depart under U.S.S.G. § 4A1.3, we do not determine whether the court correctly applied § 4A1.3, but instead determine whether the ultimate sentence was substantively reasonable. See United States v. Ellis, 641 F.3d 411, 421-22 (9th Cir. 2011); see also United States v. Mohamed, 459 F.3d 979, 986 (9th Cir. 2006). We review the sentence for abuse of discretion. See Gall v. United States, 552 U.S. 38, 51 (2007).

The district court did not abuse its discretion in imposing the 63-month sentence. The sentence is not substantively unreasonable in light of the totality of the circumstances and the 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) factors, such as the appellant's extensive criminal history, including two prior state convictions for being a felon in possession of a firearm, and the need to provide deterrence and promote respect for the law. See id.
