28 U.S.C. § 1291. We affirm the district court.

Ms. Tokin’s sole challenge on appeal is that the ALJ should have addressed two vocational rehabilitation assessments discussing, among other things, Ms. Tokin’s inability to concentrate and follow instructions while working. But any error by the ALJ in not addressing these assessments was harmless. Molina v. Astrue, 674 F.3d 1104, 1115 (9th Cir. 2012). Indeed, the ALJ gave little weight to a very similar vocational rehabilitation assessment in part because it was inconsistent with the medical evidence and Ms. Tokin’s daily activities. And those same reasons—which are supported by substantial evidence and are uncontested on appeal—apply equally to the two assessments the ALJ did not consider. This means that any error by the ALJ in not addressing the assessments was harmless—that is, “inconsequential to the ultimate nondisability determination” and unable to “alter[] the outcome of the case.” Molina, 674 F.3d at 1115 (internal quotation marks omitted).
